

Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory's

Nano-High

2013–2014

Tomorrow's Science for Today's High-School Students

SPEAKERS:

Alison Gopnik
Professor of Psychology

November 16, 2013

Babies and Toddlers: They are Smarter than We Are

Susan Lynch
Professor of Medicine

January 11 2014

Your Microbiome: The New Frontier in Human Health

Brian Maroney
Chief Bridge Engineer, Caltrans Toll Bridge Seismic Retrofit Program

February 1, 2014

Engineering the Bay Bridge: Earthquakes, Aesthetics, Community Consensus, and Bolts

Alex Pines
Professor of Chemistry

March 1, 2014

MRI: Looking at Molecules and Structures Inside People and Other Opaque Objects

Mark Leslie
Founder, Chairman, and CEO Veritas Software; Lecturer of Management at Stanford Business School

March 29, 2014

So you want to be a Silicon Valley Entrepreneur: From the Laboratory to the Board Room

David Wagner
Professor of Computer Science

May 10, 2014

Computer Security: My Mother Hacked my Facebook Page

Nano-High, a program of the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, is a series of free Saturday morning talks by recognized leaders in scientific research.

The talks are designed for all high school students, regardless of primary academic interest, or year in school.

All classroom teachers are welcome.

LOCATION:

UC Berkeley, Room TBA

TIME:

10:00 AM

REGISTRATION & MAPS:

www.lbl.gov/nanohigh

Register only once for the entire series

